Visitors to Flaxley

IN the spring of this year Sir Lance Crawley-Boevey decided to open his home, 800-year-old Flaxley Abbey, to the public.

The results, I hear, have been instructive. Flaxley is much smaller than most of the historic mansions open to the public. In five months it has attracted 7,000 visitors.

Sir Lance has talked to some of them. They say that on the whole they like to go round a private residence which is being lived in rather than the vast mansions which give the impression of museums.

Crawley-Boeveys have lived in the Abbey for 300 years. There seems here a strenuous but hopeful prospect for the owners of small, historic manors.

These photographs were taken by A. P. Steere, for H. Martin Silt of Barrow (Alut) to illustrate Arthur Cranley Boer's book on the antiquities of Flankley Abbey.
He (H. M. S.) gave me a set and supervised their arrangement in 1914.
